

Advertisements relating to the sale or rental of certain dwellings may lawfully express limited preferences. These exemptions are specific and should be carefully considered before being applied. Contact the North Dakota Department of Labor or HUD with any questions related to these exemptions.

Private Clubs: Advertisements for the sale or rental of property owned or operated by private clubs not open to the public may express a preference for club members if membership is not restricted because of race, color, or national origin.

Shared-Living Housing: Advertisements for housing where living areas are shared by occupants, such as roommates in an apartment or dormitory facilities, may indicate a preference based on sex only.

Discriminatory Advertising

---

In addition to discriminatory housing practices such as refusing to sell or rent a dwelling, falsely denying the availability of a dwelling, and refusing to make a reasonable accommodation for a disabled person, state and federal housing discrimination laws prohibit advertising about the sale or rental of a dwelling in a manner that indicates a discriminatory preference.

Under North Dakota Century Code section 14-02.5-03, it is unlawful to make, print, or publish or effect the making, printing, or publishing of a notice, statement, or advertisement that is about the sale or rental of a dwelling and that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination or the intention to make a preference, limitation, or discrimination because of race, color, religion, sex, disability, age, familial status, national origin, or status with respect to marriage or public assistance.

Consistent with the Federal Fair Housing Act, advertisement under this section refers not only to published ads in newspapers but also to any other statements that are written, verbal, or non verbal. Discriminatory advertisements include but are not limited to applications, brochures, signs, banners, photographs, symbols, human models, and spoken words and phrases which convey that dwellings are available or are not available to a particular group of persons because of race, color, religion, sex, disability, age, familial status, national origin, or status with respect to marriage or public assistance.

Those potentially liable for discriminatory advertising include advertising media, advertising agencies, and all other persons who use advertising to make, print or publish, or cause to be made, printed or published, advertisements with respect to the sale, rental or financing of a dwelling.

In determining whether advertising constitutes a discriminatory housing practice, courts have generally applied a “reasonable person” standard. This means that liability is incurred by a person or entity if they make an advertisement that indicates a preference and that preference is readily apparent to an ordinary reader.

HUD Guidance

---

The Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity office has issued the following guidance to its field staff with regard to determining what does and does not constitute unlawful discrimination under the Federal Fair Housing Act:

---

Race, Color, National Origin

---

Real estate advertisements should not state preference or limitation on account of race, color or national origin. Use of words describing the housing, the current or potential residents, or the neighbors or neighborhood in racial or ethnic terms such as “white family home” or “no Irish” will create liability under the law.

---

Religion

---

Real estate advertisements should not contain explicit preference, limitation, or discrimination on account of religion. Advertisements that state preferences such as “no Jews” or “Christian home” will create liability under the law. Ads using the legal name of an entity that contains a religious reference or a religious symbol (such as a cross), standing alone, may indicate a religious preference. However, if a disclaimer is included in the ad that the entity does not discriminate based on a person’s status in a protected category then the ad would not violate the law. Advertisements containing descriptions of properties such as “apartment complex with chapel” or services such as “kosher meals available” do not on their face state a preference and are not violations of the law. The use of secularized terms or symbols relating to religious holidays such as “Santa Claus,” “Easter Bunny,” or “St. Valentine’s Day,” or phrases such as “Merry Christmas” or “Happy Easter” do not constitute a violation of the law.

---

Sex

---

Advertisements for single family dwellings or separate units in a multi-family dwelling should contain no explicit preference or limitation based on sex. Terms such as “master bedroom,” “mother-in-law suite,” and “bachelor apartment” are commonly used as physical descriptions of housing units and do not violate the law.

---

Disability

---

Real estate advertisements should not contain explicit exclusions or limitations for persons with disabilities. An advertisement would be unlawful, for example, if it indicated “no wheelchairs.” Advertisements containing descriptions of properties such as “great view,” “fourth floor walk-up,” “walk-in closets,” or descriptions of services or facilities such as “jogging trails” do not violate the law. Ads describing conduct of individuals such as “non-smoking” or “sober” do not violate the law. Advertisements that describe accessibility features such as “wheelchair ramp” are lawful.

---

Familial Status

---

Advertisements may not contain limits on the number or ages of children or state a preference for adults, couples, or singles. Advertisements describing properties (“two bedroom” or “family room”), services or facilities (“no bikes allowed”), or neighborhoods (“quiet streets”) are not on their face discriminatory and do not violate the law.

---

State-Only Protected Categories

---

In addition to the protected categories covered in the HUD guidelines, it is unlawful under state law for advertisements to express any preference or limitation because of age (over 40), marital status, or status with regard to public assistance.
